INTRODUCTORY.

1358775

The publishers of the Indianapolis Directory present to its patrons the annual issue for the first year of the twentieth century. They and their predecessors have been doing this over forty years. In a broader sense than most will imagine, the Directory is the history of Indianapolis. If the historian had no other data he could write the commercial and industrial development of the city.

The Directory of 1901 contains 76,775 names, compared with 74,370 in 1900—a gain of 2,405—a considerable town of itself. Long experience has shown that there are 2¾ inhabitants to each name in the Directory. On this basis the population of the city at the beginning of the year was 211,181; a year ago it was 204,518—a gain of 6,616. The gain the year previous was 7,214 on this basis. Thus Indianapolis's real population year by year exceeds the population of scores of prosperous cities in the State that resent the implication of being country towns.

The United States census gives Indianapolis a population considerably under the estimate of the Directory, nevertheless we are confident our estimate is nearer the population of the real Indianapolis today than is the count of the Census Bureau. The real Indianapolis, which is part of the life of the city, is not bounded by the arbitrary lines which make the divisions and subdivisions which constitute the corporate city. Consequently our estimate covers more territory. Then there are many traveling men who live more of their time in Indianapolis than elsewhere, but are counted in the census elsewhere and hundreds of young men and women find employment in Indianapolis who appear in the census of the places in which their parents live. All these the Directory embraces in the population of Indianapolis. Above all, the long-tried and tested methods R. L. Polk & Co. are far better qualified to make a searching canvass than are the most intelligent men who have had no experience in such work. For these reasons we insist that the real number of human beings constituting the population of the actual Indianapolis to-day means more than are the figures of the federal canvass.

The past year has been a most prosperous one for Indianapolis. Its industries have held the rapid pace set in 1898 and 1899. Idle people there have been and idle people there will always be so long as human beings fail to recognize that occupation is not the greatest blessing that comes to man, but the compulsory idle are few indeed. The volume of business has been large all the year. Bank clearing house reports show a large increase in the local volume of money over the return of 1899. While there was complaint early in the season of 1900 of contracted building operations, fifty-four business buildings and blocks were erected and 786 dwelling houses were added to the homes of the city. The fact that 535 of the residences added to the homes of the city the past year are classified as one-story cottages proves that home builders and owners are increasing in Indianapolis more rapidly than any other class. In the prosperous conditions of the city, none has more of hope in it than the increase of the home owner. It is an economic fact that nothing so much contributes to the public welfare, to sound communities and good citizenship than home owning. Another feature of the building the past year is found in the building of twenty-nine flats, brick except six. This feature of the larger cities seems to be very popular in Indianapolis.

During the year three of the interurban electric lines have been completed. One of these has brought the city into hourly connection with Anderson, Muncie and other important towns of the gas belt. Already the impetus of the more frequent opportunities to pass and repass has brought the most populous region in close connection with Indianapolis. Thus the real Indianapolis has been extended miles beyond the limits of the present Directory, making it no hazard to predict that ere long the real Directory of Indianapolis and its suburbs will include all the territory drawn to its center by the lodestone of traffic and intercourse.

The census gives Indiana a population of over 2,500,000, of which Indianapolis is the industrial, political and social center more than is the capital of any other Western State. In other words, Indianapolis is the center of a population nearly as large as that of the thirteen colonies which fringed the Atlantic coast and where our forefathers establish the American Republic. With the methods of agriculture in vogue in Europe, Indianapolis, long before the new century is old, may be the center of double the present population and a city with double the present population. Such a growth would fitly follow the miracle of the Indianapolis which in three-quarters of a century has risen out of the morasses of White river.

The census of 1900 has shown that Indianapolis has grown during the past decade more rapidly than any city of its class in the country, surpassing in population some of those which have made far greater pretension.

With such a record as the forty-six volumes of the Directory which have preceded this have made of the development of a great city from a country town, the publishers, in the forty-seventh issue which they now place in the hands of its patrons, feel warranted in predicting the steady growth of one of the most beautiful cities in the world. Calling attention to this volume, the publishers feel confident that the thousands who purchase it and the tens of thousands who use it will find it more complete than any of its predecessors—a more perfect measure of the commercial and industrial life of Indianapolis. It is a source of gratification to the publishers to know that the Directory is indispensable to a clientage that embraces the life and activity of the city—that it is of real use to more thousands than any book which they open.

At the same time that the publishers feel a pardonable pride in giving the public so valuable a book, they gratefully recognize their increased obligation to the people of Indianapolis for their liberal patronage and for their courtesy to those who have represented them in the preparation of the Directory.

Indianapolis City Directory.

STREETS AND AVENUES.

THE Street Directory is an alphabetical arrangement of the names of the Streets and Avenues of the city. By the decimal system of numbering houses recently adopted in this city, one hundred numbers are allotted to each square. On streets running north and south the numbering begins at Washington street. The streets running east and west are numbered East and West from Meridian street. All other streets not commencing at either of the above points are numbered in accordance with this system. The names and numbers of intersecting streets and avenues are given in the order in which they occur, which enables one to tell between what streets a certain number is. For instance, you have 820 Harlan street: by reference to the Street Directory, you find 800 at Lexington av. and 900 at Pleasant street; consequently, the place you wish to find is between Lexington av. and Pleasant street.

The marginal letters of the alphabet refer to the nearest street car line. For example, you wish to go to 520 E. Sixteenth: you refer to Sixteenth street in the Street Directory and find that 520 would be between Central av. and Park av. and the letter "E" in the margin, then by referring to the street railway lines you find the letter "E" is the Central av. line, which is the nearest car.

Butler College

BUTLER COLLEGE, the department of Liberal Arts of the University of Indianapolis, is affiliated with the University of Chicago on terms that are a guarantee that its undergraduate work is practically on a par with that of the University of Chicago, and that it is so recognized by the University. This affiliation presents the following advantages to students:

1. At each commencement of the College, the Bachelor's degree of the University is conferred upon the member of the graduating class designated by the College as having sustained the highest average rank during the whole college course.

2. Every recipient of the Bachelor's degree from the College receives a certificate showing that he will be entitled to the Bachelor's degree of the University upon the completion of one quarter's (twelve weeks') additional study at the University.

3. Free tuition for one quarter in the University is granted to those who within one year after graduation from the College present the above mentioned certificate and become candidates for the Bachelor's degree of the University.

4. Three fellowships, yielding free tuition for one year (three quarters), are granted annually to graduates of Butler College, nominated by the College. The holders of these fellowships may take advantage also of the offer of free tuition to all graduates for one quarter, thus securing free tuition for four quarters. (The tuition fee at University of Chicago is $40 per quarter.)

The regulations to which the College submits in consequence of the affiliation in no way compromise its independence, but are intended solely to enable the University to assure itself that the standard of work is being maintained at its present grade.

Competent faculty, adequate material equipment, pleasant and convenient location, tuition and other expenses low. Address
